<td>A young person's life is a constant hum of things coming at them, and sometimes it's just too much.</td>
<td>To ask for help is admitting you're still not enough of an adult to do it all.</td>
<td>Seeking professional care requires a leap over a huge abyss.</td>
<td>Youth struggle with mental hardship but rarely talk about it, making the topic feel like an isolating form of failure.</td>
<td>Engaging with mental health services often means going against family and cultural influences.</td>
<td>Everyone is trying to solve young peoples' problems, but no one is truly listening.</td>

A conversation with our young people

Our Current reality
• Mental health needs among young people has grown exponentially
• Isolation to re-socialization
• Social, racial, and political tension

Confidentiality
• On campus, everybody knows who is accessing services
• Mismatched schedules
• Parent involvement, being referred out without consent

Peer Support
• Normalizing lived experiences
• Importance of peer-to-peer connections
Working Together: Building Bridges

Increasing access to complimentary services

- Collaborating on providing a full menu of services of mental and physical health, substance use and supported education and employment and peer support with cross referrals
- Referrals to therapeutic and other wellbeing group services
- Supporting connections between school and community to allow youth to access support wherever they are
- Peer led mental health education to decrease stigma
- Supporting families to support their youth

Supporting youth development together

- Provide leadership opportunities for students to participate in local and statewide youth advisory groups
- Collaborate to support school mental health programs such as Bring Change to Mind and NAMI high school clubs
- Provide opportunities for students to participate in community events
